

Beurer ISL 62 snore mask: gentle snoring therapy for a good night's rest

Ulm/Cannes, 17th September 2018 - Whether you are a night owl or an early bird, the quality of our sleep is crucial for our performance during the day. Snoring is one disruption to restful sleep – and according to the "Beurer sleep atlas 2017" it is a problem that 44 percent of Germans attribute to their partner. With the ISL 62 snore mask, Beurer is expanding its SleepLine range and is presenting an innovative product for gentle sleep therapy and snoring analysis at the TFWA Cannes.

ISL 62 – better sleep for an improved quality of life

Snoring is detected by the ISL 62 snoring mask in real time through the recording of snoring noises and structure-borne noise. If snoring is detected, the integrated operating unit on the forehead reacts immediately and transmits vibration impulses with increasing intensity. Due to the body's reaction to this, the throat muscles become firm and the airways open. Breathing is calmed and the snoring sound decreases. You may also change your lying position. The maximum impulse intensity and the start time can be individually adjusted using the free "beurer SleepQuiet" app. The ISL 62 snore mask is made from a soft material, the length can be adjusted, and thanks to the removable operating unit, it is machine-washable up to 30°C. The battery charge time is approx. two hours and the battery life is two to three nights for heavy snoring.

"beurer SleepQuiet" app – keep an eye on snoring

In addition to the snoring therapy setting options, the "Beurer SleepQuiet app" offers the possibility to analyse your snoring. This means, for example, that the number of snores per hour can be shown and the maximum snoring volume determined. The measurement data is shown
